

September 2008

The finish line is so far away!

DANICA PATRICK: At 26, the first woman ever to win an IndyCar race

- I recommend that anyone trying to achieve a big goal first find out what it takes to get there, then break it into smaller tasks. No challenge is completely overwhelming if it is broken down properly. You just need to identify the key pieces and tackle them individually. Get quality information and find reputable people to help you. For my own goal, I needed to work on my driving skills and my physical and mental conditioning. I also needed to align myself with quality sponsors and a quality team. It takes all of these pieces working together to make it in auto racing. Once I know I've done everything I can to prepare, I visualize myself succeeding and pray.
